

Jonathan Reid MacCrea was diagnosed with Leukemia when he was six months old. His four year-old brother, Matthew, courageously donated his bone marrow to Jon, but 15 months later, after a valiant struggle, Jonathan died.

In Jon's home state of New Jersey, he and his family were assisted by two organizations dedicated to the needs of families with children facing cancer. Realizing there must be a similar need in Central New York, and as a memorial to her grandson, Syracuse resident Pat MacCrea founded The Jonathan Cancer Fund in 1993.

The Jonathan Cancer Fund is a Central New York charity that was created in 1993 to assist families of children diagnosed with cancer.

During this time, JCF has helped over 450 families being treated locally and families traveling here for treatment, with financial and emotional support. Financial assistance includes travel and household expense reimbursement, fund raising management, and providing families with meal and phone cards while in the hospital.
